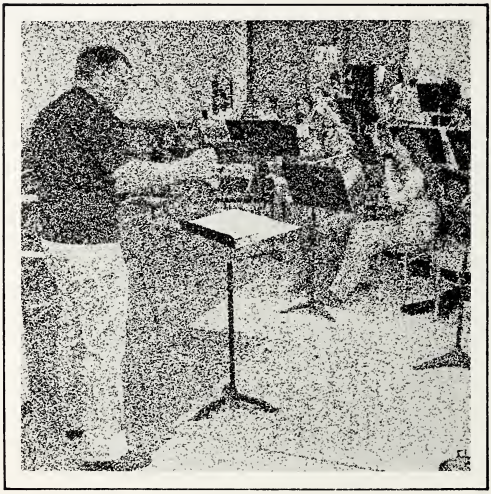
COVENANT COLLEGE 1978



As with a symphony, so with a yearbook. Without a score, a director, musicians, and an audience—it could not come to pass. Without a score there would be nothing to perform. Without a director, the musicians could not play harmoniously together. Without the musicians the music could not become a reality. And without an audience all their labors would be in vain. But now with these it is all possible. Our score has taken skill to write. Our editor has put forth much effort to direct the various tasks. The many writers, photographers, and others have expended much energy to make the ideas a reality. We have accomplished our work, but one thing is lacking. We need an audience to enjoy our labors. So we ask you to listen to this symphony we have composed and receive our offering of praise in words and pictures. As Bach dedicated a piece of music,

In Praise of the Almighty's Will,
And for my Neighbor's Greater Skill.

So we wish that this effort might glorify God and please you.

ADMINISTRATION AND STAFF

In June of 1978, after thirteen years of service, Marion D. Barnes retired from the presidency of Covenant College. Dr. Barnes, a man of varied gifts and a scientist, was concerned during his administration that Covenant be a place of learning which teaches its students to be analytical. He valued those tools useful in determining what is consistent with Scripture and what is not. Dr. Barnes has worked to develop Covenant's emphasis that each student formulate a Christian world and life view.

Retirement does not equal rest for Dr. Barnes; he has agreed to continue his association with Covenant College as Chancellor.

SPIRITUAL AFFAIRS

The Spiritual Affairs Committee supported the devotional life of the college this year through a Day of Prayer each semester, the Easter sunrise service, several chapels, movies, and worship services. The Committee also worked to involve students in the activities of the local churches by informing students of the needs of the churches, sending out gospel teams to sing or preach, and announcing events of interest to the spiritual life of Covenant.

Shown clockwise: Bruce Thompson, Lisa Spencer, Lois Semenye, John Svendsen, Clarence Shuler, Bill Holiman, David Westenburger.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

This year, in attempting to gain wider support and interest in the Covenant Community, the Cultural Affairs Committee has strived to provide enjoyable and stimulating activities which would reach those who had previously been untouched or uninterested in the Committee's program. At Covenant there is a great diversity in the area of cultural interests (art, drama, photography, etc.), as well as a diversity in cultural views. Much has been done this year to stimulate fresh thinking in the areas of drama, film and dance—areas which hold a great deal of unexplored potential for Christians. The Committee has revived some old discussions and provoked some new ones in the area of aesthetics. The Cultural Affairs Committee wants to prove that art is for everyone, not just the artistic "elite".

SOCIAL COMMITTEE

Preserving student sanity is the goal of the Social Committee. The committee is made up of twelve people who plan, coordinate and carry through all of the social affairs on campus.

LADY SCOTS

Often the efforts of women athletes go unrecognized. Lady Scots know that their labor must be its own reward. This year both the Volleyball and Basketball teams had winning seasons.

Women's team sports are an inglorious exercise in commitment. As they work together to build up and compliment one another's skills, they are stretched in every way. In fitness to body and character, they play for the glory of God.

JUDO

The Judo Club at Covenant College, faithfully sponsored by J.C. Keister, enjoys the throwing and grappling techniques of a westernized Judo. This year the club faced more competition than ever before, with tournaments in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Kentucky. For the first time in its history, the club hosted a tournament at home.

A Poem on Beauty

All sin is ugliness;
but not all ugliness, sin.

All righteousness is beauty;
but not all beauty, righteousness.

There is a beauty that is ugliness,
And there is an ugliness that is beautiful.

A beautiful woman may be a gold-ringed swine.
And a marred faced man may be the lamb of God.

Eric Bristley

You gave me Your rainbow today,
And with it a promise.

A promise that lets me be Your child, even though I don't deserve to be;
A promise that lets You give me life, even when I tell You to wait;
A promise that speaks to me Your Word, even when I don't want to listen;
A promise that lets You give me Your Son, when I can give to You nothing but me.

You gave me Your rainbow today.
Help me to give You mine.

John James Davantzis

Transience

God be my immutable constancy
In a cosmos ever altered.
Possess my soul against opposition
By fears of insatiable time.

Let me mock transient time and cursory change
By reason of thy power.
Thy termination of change shall likewise end time
In one infinite triumph.

Red bead

the sharp slant sun pricked the branch and oozed red life

Dark pointed trees rise along a road's edge at evenly spaced intervals creating the effect of an erected fence between the sun and me.
Trunks break the air into stripes of dark/light.

I step ahead trees to my left and plunge to the bottom of wood-blocked shade.
A fearful blankness shutters my mind a split second taste of abandonment to the terror of being in dark.

Light bursts free and I surface into a holocaust of dancing flames sun blazing in the spaces between trunks licking blue wood's edge in a preview performance of the day when God will shatter all the strong holds of dark.

Light!

P. Kiggins

Resting on an instant,
Reaching for a moment
To balance the years
That have made your life.
Scribbling your name
On a page of paper
You hope will out last you
Grabbing at eternity,
Struggling to make a mark,
To hit it big,
To prove you're here,
To one who already knows.

I walked down Main Street today.
The hollow buildings and vacant lots
Jeered at me with a jagged smile,
As I passed black faces
With eyes averted
From the glare
Of my whiteness.

City Sonnet

The Evening's lengthening shades cast raised exteriors—window pane and roof, store grate and shutter—into planes which separate apart, a cubist composition. Glazed surface and hollow eaves move in misphased orbit around the men who populate these houses, modern men, who isolate form from meaning in thoughts precisely phrased.
Now evening turns to night, the contrasts fade.
External shapes are lowered swiftly to dark. Window lights rise in an array of patches pressed to brick, exactly laid pattern. This new design has unity; chiaroscuro summary of day.

Crowds

Crowds can be such lonely places—
Rushing feet drifting faces,
Weaving bodies and shifting paces.

Amid the swirl of nameless faces, Shoving people scurry to unknown places—
Futilely are run the hopeless races.

Judy Slenker

Thoughts While Walking In Snow

Listen to the wind screaming cold threats
As we walk this path with careful feet.
Bound together by faith we trudge this way.
Always moving ahead one step at a time
On icy insecurity love's strength,
The only supporting force.
One by one we will fall;
One by one we will be lifted up.
Till the last step is taken
And we lie down exhausted.

Ode On A Storm

When the storm struck, we were unnerved by its fierceness.
Water poured from a sky lashed by jags of lightning and bounced hitting the earth, for the ground was too wet to absorb it. Thunder shook our chairs. Unquiet rubbed our insides, as though we were remembering some other trapped time when a storm struck in fierceness.

We, the civilized at weather's mercy, first seize concealment in rationality. The unconquered rain beats down, making rivers and oceans of our roads and gardens, till at last, the bottled fear explodes in the clasp of the storm's supernatural strain and we bow low and worship on primitive knees.
In morning, the sky will be edged in purple-red and gold and the night's shame deeply buried with the rain, untold.

P. Kiggins

Terza Rima (on the death of my grandfather)

In spring when God sang the earth to life, He brought you death,
And I fiercely drenched the tear-blended sunset festivity.
Thought choked I waited, trembling for your last breath.

Not broken, but unable to fight deaths decaying activity
Your mind frays slowly in a fog of gray.
God's gentling gesture of age in his creativity.

Death-cramped you hold on to your last day
With timid joy of meeting your long served King.
Death hurries on silent feet to light your way.

Death sprouted in our lives when God sang spring,
And we tenaciously tore at the pain it would bring.
But the angels danced a crimsoned celebration
Across the sky for the joy of a saints salvation.

Paula Nuermberger

Treasures

I know a bit of you—Remember?
You took it from it's box,
Lifted it from the crumpled tissue
And spun it glittering
In the light.

Judy Slenker

My tears—
they are searing streaks down the insides of my cheeks.

Judy Slenker

Sunshine High

The sun
Punctured my eye
With a resounding burst
And blare of brilliant color—
Silent in it's pain—
And a peaceful, golden light Poured in,
Flooding my mind.

Judy Slenker

Waiting

Waiting is the Devil's tool.
Anxious empty moments that make the heart the Tempter's fool,
Embracing anything to slip past this instant
And make the Waiting seem less cruel.

Sanctify, oh God
this human heart that from static stone to throbbing flesh
Your hand has made to overflow with torrents of unspeakable praise

That the roaring of my blood rushing through my veins would not drown out Your still small voice that speaks to my human heart which daily revels in the sensation of life:
throbbing, and feeling and desperately pumping

And that You would bring to my mind the knowledge that Another poured out His Life Blood that my humanness might revel and rest and find it's completeness in the Sanctifier of human hearts.

My heart, at times so full that I choke . . . then there is silence—a kind of grief.
Would God reach down his hand and empty me, that I might fuller be.

Rachel Landrum

Sestina

Morning's pensive melody whispered
Pastel colors to the sky's rested face.
Brush work blends of the sun-painted banner
Gently waking the quiet shadows
To dawn's loitering music.

Breathless the sunrise sang her music
To the rooftops in a whispered
Conversation with the shadows,
As the morning lighted on her face,
Bringing her day's greeting to earth
In the jingling dew drop banner.

Gliding higher the sun raised her banner
In the daring jazz of midsummer music
Pouring her life-giving drinks to earth
In a moss murmured, green whispered
Molding of the world's flowering face Fragmenting the day-broken shadows.

Noon tussled with the sun-flooded shadows,
Scorching the hills in her day-drenched banner.
Clouds swam above earth's ocean-washed face,
Playing interludes in her day-timed music,
Harsh, loud and bright, then gently whispered
Shadow-dabbed moments of coolness on earth.

Dwindling the sun melted west on earth,
Dropping haggard angular shadows
Delicately blurred into greys, whispered
Against the rainbow dabbled banner.
Silhouetted in the nusic
Earth echoed the final farewell to its face.

Godspeed wished to its blackened face,
Night opened its doors invading earth
With whip-or-wills and cricket music.
Greying to black on black, the shadows
Disappeared into the starry banner
Daytime's journey-end quietly whispered.

The last kiss goodbye was whispered to night's face
When morning's new banner pastel-prismed the earth
In the changing shadows of God's daily music.

Paula Nuermberger

My Place (A Question for Wordsworth)

Am I selfish not to share
This wild, lovely place
With those who would not understand
It's free and wanton grace—
It's roaring cataracts and rainbowed spray,
It's peaceful sky with scalloped clouds of silvered gray,
Where besprinkled flowers
glisten in the light And sunny day gives in gracefully to night.

McNUTT'S MOUNTAIN SKI RESORT & DUDE RANCH

Don't forget to see McNutt's Mountain Ski Resort and rest area first on your next visit to beautiful and mysterious Lookout Mountain. Yes, McNutt promises to treat you right. McNutt brings together the combined skills of an experienced rustler and an Olympic ski champion. On the secluded slopes of Lookout Mountain (next to Covenant College) you will find the vacation spot that has made Lookout Mountain Famous.* Yes, McNutt is the Universal name for fun, frolic and an all round good time in winter skiing. You can depend on McNutt to make your next vacation a success. So, remember, McNutt's Mountain Ski Resort and Hoagie Shop when you plan your next get-away-from-it-all in the sun and snow.

*Open during January only.
